VOUS VOYAGEZ À L'EXTÉRIEUR POUR DES SOINS DE SANTÉ?

Un déplacement hors région pour que vous ou un proche receviez des soins de santé peut engendrer plusieurs questions.

Les traitements ou les examens médicaux peuvent déjà représenter une difficulté en soi. C'est peut-être votre premier déplacement en ville ou par avion. Vous aurez peut-être à déboursier pour des frais inattendus. Il est bon de prévoir un accompagnateur qui vous soutiendra. De plus, vous n'êtes peut-être pas suffisamment bilingue pour discuter en toute confiance de questions médicales en français.

Parmi les informations utiles, la "trousse" contient:

- Une liste d'accmodations abordables
- Informations utiles concernant les frais remboursés
- Informations utiles concernant les accompagnateurs prescrits
- Divers autres soutiens disponibles

TRAVELLING OUTSIDE THE REGION FOR HEALTH SERVICES?

If you or someone close to you needs to travel outside your region for health services, you might have many questions.

Just having to deal with medical tests or treatments can be difficult in itself. In addition, you may be going to a city or taking a plane for the first time. You may have out-of-pocket expenses that you had not planned for. You may be bringing a support person (escort) with you. And you may not speak French well enough to feel confident discussing medical information.

Amongst the helpful information, the "toolkit" contains:

- List of affordable accommodations
- Information regarding costs and refunds
- Information for bringing a support person
- Who you can turn to for help

La "trousse" est disponible sur le site web suivant : <https://www.travel4health.ca>

What is Cancer?

Presented by Dail Jacob, former Pivot Nurse
Moderated by Jo Ann Jones, The Montreal Children's Hospital

"One in three Canadians will develop cancer in his or her lifetime, and all of us will have friends or family members who develop cancer; a diagnosis of cancer, almost always a shock and almost always completely changes one's whole approach to life and living." (Dr. Robert Buckman, Cancer Specialist, 1995). Join us for this informative session to learn more about cancer.

About this Session

In this 45-minute presentation, interspersed with your questions, we will explore:

- What is Cancer?
- Prevention
- Signs and Symptoms and Treatment
- Support Services and Resources

About Your Speaker

Dail Jacob practiced nursing for 39 years. She graduated from Dawson College with an RN in 1977, and received her B. Sc.N. from the University of Ottawa in 1997. Dail has practiced in the area of oncology and palliative care for 23 years. From 2005 to 2015, her role was infirmière pivot en oncologie. She holds certifications in oncology as well as palliative care in Canada and in chemotherapy in the United States. She has worked for the Canadian Nurses' Association in certification exam development in the specialty of oncology. Dail retired from nursing in January 2016.

For more information on this session or if you like to attend, please contact Lisa Craig at the CAMI office at 418-985-2116 ext. 3. A light lunch will also be served.

Recognition program created by CAMI, CASA and Vision that promotes the active offer of service in English by health care providers

Goal: to improve access to health & social services in English

COUP DE COEUR EN SANTÉ

Sandra Chiasson, infirmière praticienne au bilinguisme primé!

Par Ad le Arsenau
arsenau@nhsd.qc.ca

Sandra Chiasson est infirmière praticienne spécialisée de première ligne (IPSPL) à l'embauche du CISSS des Îles depuis quatre ans. Elle est sélectionnée dans le cadre de la campagne Santé et harmonie qui reconnaît les professionnels de la santé offrant des services bilingues dans la région.

En effet, le CAMI (Council for Anglophone Magdalen Islanders), le Comité pour Anglophone Social Action et Vision Gaspé-Perce-Now, en collaboration avec le CISSS des Îles et le CISSS de la Gaspésie invitait l'autonomie d'arrêter, les membres de la communauté à soumettre la candidature de professionnels de la santé qui offrent activement des services en anglais; c'est Felicia Clarke qui proposait celle de Sandra Chiasson, très heureuse du service reçu lors de son suivi de grossesse.

M^{me} Clarke explique que l'aisance et l'accessibilité de Sandra Chiasson lors de sa première grossesse et le suivi postnatal lui ont permis de diminuer largement son anxiété et l'isolement que peut entretenir la barrière de la langue. Elle note cependant que le personnel et les professionnels de l'hôpital font toujours des efforts pour répondre dans sa langue, ce qu'elle estime grandement.

Infirmière de vocation et de cœur

Sandra Chiasson est titulaire d'une maîtrise en sciences infirmières et d'un diplôme complémentaire de 2^e cycle en soins de première ligne, études réalisées à l'Université francophone de Moncton.

« J'ai tout le temps eu le goût de travailler dans le domaine des soins de la santé, j'ai commencé mon cours d'infirmière et j'ai toujours eu le désir d'en apprendre plus, d'aller plus loin.

même au travail je faisais des formations, j'allais chercher toujours un petit peu plus [...] puis j'ai décidé de faire ma maîtrise pour aller chercher un rôle un peu plus autonome de la pratique. »

Comme infirmière praticienne, elle peut effectuer des consultations de façon autonome, prescrire certains médicaments, certains tests de laboratoire et procéder à des actes délégués par les médecins. Elle est la seule dans l'archipel pour l'instant, mais sera bientôt soutenue par deux aspirantes en cours de formation et qui devraient arriver au cours de la prochaine année, indique-t-elle. Cette nouvelle équipe d'infirmières praticiennes permettra une meilleure accessibilité aux soins ainsi qu'une meilleure prise en charge de la clientèle. Elle fait aussi valoir que le bilinguisme est un atout et favorise le développement d'un sentiment de confiance. Il faut, de plus, être à l'écoute, avoir de l'empathie en choisissant le métier puisque les gens nécessitant des services de santé vivent la plupart du temps un moment d'inquiétude et de fragilité.

L'importance d'être servie dans sa langue maternelle

Pour Sandra Chiasson, recevoir ce prix est très agréable et touchant, une gratification qui émane de la clientèle, mais aussi des pairs puisqu'elle travaille en support à la pratique infirmière et aux médecins.

« Quand je pense à Felicia, son suivi de grossesse où est-ce que t'es super anxieuse d'être excitée, d'attendre un nouveau bébé, beaucoup de questionnements... de se faire répondre dans sa langue maternelle, de bien comprendre, c'est rassurant » mentionne-t-elle tout en précisant que bien que la plupart des membres de la communauté anglophone parlent ou comprennent le français, de se faire servir dans sa langue maternelle est très apprécié, surtout lorsqu'il est question de santé.

La province du Nouveau-Brunswick, officiellement bilingue, a sûrement eu une influence en ce sens sur l'étudiante puisque ses cours d'anglais étaient plus concentrés, notamment en fin de parcours au secondaire, et bien qu'étudiant dans une université francophone, la clientèle anglophone était aussi desservie.

Aux Îles de la Madeleine, l'infirmière praticienne précise faire le suivi régulier de quelques patients anglophones et se déplace à l'Île d'Entrée pour les visites médicales. Elle fait aussi les suivis de grossesse et pédiatrique des 0-5 ans. Elle s'occupe d'environ 400 patients de façon autonome en partenariat avec les médecins du groupe de médecine familiale et s'implique à la clinique jeunesse en plus de travailler en clinique de cryothérapie.

Finalement, la jeune professionnelle de 34 ans affirme que les études, mais aussi l'apprentissage de l'anglais lui a permis une meilleure conciliation travail-famille, un métier intéressant et diversifié : « Avec la première ligne, on touche à tout et il y a pas une journée qui est pareille. » Elle confie d'ailleurs que son conjoint, qui œuvre au sein de la CIMA, travaille surtout avec une clientèle anglophone et que ses deux petits garçons suivent des cours d'anglais pour partager la langue.

HEALTH AT HEART

Sandra Chiasson, Nurse Practitioner Awarded for her Bilingualism!

Sandra Chiasson is a frontline specialist nurse practitioner (IPSPL) hired by the CISSS des Îles 4 years ago. She has been nominated as part of the Health and Harmony Campaign, which recognizes health professionals offering bilingual services in the region.

The Council of Anglophone Magdalen Islanders (CAMI), the Committee for Anglophone Social Action (CASA) and Vision Gaspé-Perce-Now in collaboration with the CISSS des Îles and the CISSS de la Gaspésie, invited community members to put forward health professionals who are actively providing services in English. Ms. Felicia Clarke nominated Sandra Chiasson as a recipient for the award. Ms. Clarke was very happy with the service received during her pregnancy.

Ms. Clarke explains that the ease and accessibility of Sandra Chiasson during her first pregnancy and post-natal follow-up allowed her to greatly reduce her anxiety and the isolation that the language barrier can often cause. She notes, however, that staff and professionals at the hospital always make an effort to answer in her language, which she greatly appreciates.

Nurse of vocation and heart

Sandra Chiasson holds a master's degree in Nursing and a complementary graduate degree in primary care, from Moncton University.

"I have always had the desire to work in the health care field. I started my nursing program and I always had the desire to learn more, to go further, even at work I was doing training, I was always looking for a little more, then I decided to do my master's and go for a role a little more autonomous of the practice."

As a nurse practitioner, she can perform independent consultations, prescribe certain medications, certain laboratory tests and perform delegated acts by physicians. She is the only one in the archipelago, for the moment, but will soon be supported by two aspirants in training courses, who should be a part of the team in the next year, she says. This new team of nurse practitioners will provide better access to care and better client care. She also argues that bilingualism is an asset and promotes the development of a sense of trust. It is also important to be attentive and empathetic in choosing the profession, since people who need health services live most of the time with feelings of anxiety and fragility.

The importance of being served in one's mother tongue

For Sandra Chiasson, receiving this award is very pleasant and touching, a reward that comes from the clientele but also from peers, since she works to support both the nursing and medical practices.

"When I think of Felicia, her pregnancy follow-up, where you are really nervous about being pregnant, waiting for a new baby, a lot of questioning... to be answered in your mother tongue, understanding is reassuring," she says, adding that although most members of the English-speaking community speak or understand French, being served in their mother tongue is very helpful, especially when dealing with a health issue.

The province of New Brunswick, which is officially bilingual, certainly had an influence on the student because her English classes were more concentrated, especially at the end of high school. Although she uses a student attending a French-language university, the English clientele were also served.

In the Magdalen Islands, the nurse practitioner makes regular follow-ups of some English-speaking patients and travels to Entry Island for medical visits. She also does pregnancy and pediatric monitoring of 0-5 year olds. She deals with about 400 patients independently, in partnership with family medicine physicians and is involved in the youth clinic and working in a cryotherapy clinic.

Finally, the young 34-year-old says that studying and learning English has allowed her a better work-family balance, as well as an interesting and diversified career. "With frontline services, we touch everything and there is not a day that is the same." She also says that her spouse, who works for CIMA, mainly works with English-speaking clientele and that her two little boys take English classes to perfect the language.
