IF THESE WALLS COULD SPEAK PROJECT

This project sought to design an interactive multimedia exhibit that married history and lore to educate, inspire and archive. The first year of this project included research to help gather the Irish and Scottish legends and folklore surrounding the sea and research around the various multimedia options.

Studied in detail work of Byron Clark on the maritime history of local Anglophones. His book To find but a grave on the wreck of the Miracle was a jumping off point to develop a rich story that would both touch on an important local event that could also inform on the historical context of the Irish Famine and its effects on immigration to the Islands and the country at large.
