MISSION

REISA, a community organization, works to increase access to health and social services in English for residents of Montreal's East end, through collaboration with public, private and community stakeholders.

PROFILE

According to a study by the Community Health and Social Services Network (CHSSN) and Pocock (2014), English-speaking communities in the East end of the island represent a significant 14,8% of the area's population. However, it is common that the needs of these communities are overlooked. REISA seeks to promote the English language as a communication tool and not as the language of work, in areas where minority groups are more comfortable receiving services in English than in French. Examples of these groups include Chinese, Latino, Indian, Pakistani, Polish and Italian communities.

COMMUNITY DEVELOPMENT AND OUTREACH

REISA has supported community development in various fields including: addiction services, drug awareness and prevention in schools, family counselling and mediation, integration of student trainees in community projects, mental health information and support groups, prevention and management of diabetes, and seniors activity groups and community development led by seniors.
